Bridal Veil Falls Pump House

Bridal Veil Falls pump house was built by Telluride Power. A Pelton wheel was used to take the piped water from Bridal Veil Falls plus suck up some water out of the Provo River and propel it in the 12" metal pipe under the road and up to the north and into the flume on the north wall of the canyon.

When the snowslide pancake came down over Bridal Veil in 1924, it took out this pump house and now only the foundation and base remains.

The cement abutement on the north side of the river at this point is not a 2nd bridge foundation but it fixes the 12" steel pipe in place from the pump house.

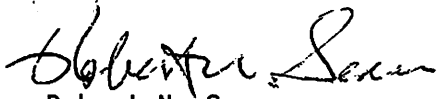

There is a rock abutement a few feet to the west of the pump house foundation and is the remains of one original bridge across Provo River.
